Helping people like Marcia

Marcia's husband was sexually, emotionally and physically abusive to her and their two children. The family moved many times and Marcia became increasingly isolated.

The abuse continued to escalate, and after an encounter left her with a broken arm, Marcia decided 'no more' and escaped one night, taking the kids with her.

After so many years of trauma, Marcia and her children struggled with fear and paranoia. Desperate for help, she connected with a United Way supported program and the family began their journey to healing.

Now, Marcia's family is doing better. The children are adjusting to their new life and Marcia has become a tireless advocate for her family's well-being. She continues working on building a brighter future.

Helping people like Owen

Three years. That's how long Owen experienced homelessness, but if you talked to him, he couldn't really remember the last time he felt safe and had a place to call his own.

The trauma he experienced after years living rough magnified his mental health challenges, leaving Owen struggling to live independently even after he was housed. But unlike in the past, Owen wasn't alone.

A team from a United Way supported program gathered around him; helping build relationships with neighbours, improving his well-being and making Owen feel he was part of a caring community. Slowly, the pieces of his new life began coming together.

Now, Owen is doing much better. Thanks to continued support, he is able to keep his housing and feels more confident the future will be brighter after living through so many dark days.

774 individuals & families received financial assistance last year across Huron-Perth
