The concept of a living wage is bigger than income. It's about quality of life. It's about ensuring our neighbours can afford to pay their rent and buy nutritious food, our workers are healthy and able to pay for transportation to get to work every day, and our children have sufficient social and educational opportunities so they can flourish.

Small cities and rural communities face unique challenges requiring economic resiliency and the ability to recognize new opportunities. The purpose of the living wage is to support local employers' efforts to attract and retain workers.

The living wage is a response to the rise in precarious employment and a key part of economic growth which provides workers and their families a better way of life, benefits employers, and helps build healthier communities.

Employers who pay a living wage care about their employees and the communities they're part of. They recognize that paying a living wage constitutes an important investment in the long-term prosperity of the local economy by fostering a dedicated, skilled and healthy workforce.

Certified Living Wage Employers (as of Nov. 11, 2025)
